A VOTER'S GUIDE TO THE PERPLEXED

FOLLOWING THE BALLOT PROPOSITION MONEY TRAIL

BY STEVEN SAINT

An anonymous, highly-placed Washington insider once told a cub reporter on the Washington Post to "follow the money." It seems cynical, but when it comes to politics, money tends to tell the story.

Propositions, for example, don't generally have an army of selfless, community-minded volunteers spending hours getting signatures from friends and neighbors in order to make the statewide ballot. Somebody with a financial stake spends a lot of money on signature-gathering companies.

The state Legislature also puts propositions on the ballot — usually decisions that require a vote of the people, occasionally politically-incorrect changes they hope to blame on the electorate.

Mass marketing doesn't help. Voters who bother with television get propaganda, not reality. Campaigns signs offer a clue: whichever side has the most signs probably represents big money.

The ballot book doesn't help much either. Proponents and opponents rebut each other and the voter is left to wonder who — if anyone — is telling the truth.

So here's the money trail. We've dug out the authors of each proposition with their principle financiers and endorsements. If the ballot arguments confuse, the money trail will might you straight.

Ballot Measures.

219 Would prohibit any statewide initiative, legislative measure or local ballot measure from either including or excluding a county from its effects depending on how that county voted on the measure.

Pushers: State Senator John Lewis

Likely Intent: Keep political extortion out of the initiative process. This measure is a reaction to 1993's Prop. 174, in which everyone would have been taxed a half-cent per sale for law enforcement, but only those counties that approved the measure would get the funds.

Possible Impacts: A little less politics in an initiative process already reeling from political abuse.

Big Spenders: None

Endorsements: California Taxpayers Association, Democratic Party, Libertarian Party

Opponents: No organized opposition

Superior and Municipal Court Consolidation

220 Would let judges of each county consolidate that county's municipal courts into a unified Superior Court.

Pushers: State Senator Bill Lockyer

Likely Intent: Streamlining courts. Currently, every county has two: a superior court for felonies and major civil cases and a municipal court for preliminary hearings, misdemeanors and more routine civil matters. Not every county needs two, and this would allow consolidation upon a vote of the judges.

Possible Impacts: If courts choose to consolidate, then municipal court judges would get a raise (from $98,070 to $107,390). This would be countered by fewer judge positions, with a net savings to the state.

Big Spenders: None

Endorsements: Democratic Party, Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association

Opponents: National Tax Limitation Committee

Subordinate Judicial Officers Discipline.

221 Would give the Commission on Judicial Performance authority to discipline subordinate judicial officers, such as court commissioners.

Pushers: State Senator Tim Leslie

Likely Intent: A companion piece to Prop. 220, this would place unelected court commissioners and referees — who often sit in the place of elected judges in small-claims courts, family courts and juvenile proceedings — under the same discipline system as judges.

Possible Impacts: No expected fiscal impact.

Big Spenders: None

Endorsements: Democratic Party

Opponents: No organized opposition

Murder. Peace Officer Victim.

222 Would prohibit convicted murderers from earning conduct credits to reduce their sentences, and forbid anyone convicted of murdering a peace officer from being paroled.

Pushers: Assemblyman Rod Pacheco

Likely Intent: Introduced after slaying of two Riverside policemen to increase penalties (and, hopefully, deterrence) for killing cops.

Possible Impacts: Costs of incarceration would rise as cop-killers spend life in prison.

Big Spenders: California Correctional Peace Officers Association ponied up $10,000.

Endorsements: Democratic Party

Opponents: Libertarian Party

Schools. Spending Limits on Administration. "95/5"

223 Would prohibit school districts from spending more than 5 percent of their total revenues on administrative expenses. Guilty schools would be fined.

Pushers: Tyrone Vahedi, United Teachers of Los Angeles

Likely Intent: Vahedi is running for the state Board of Equalization in Los Angeles, and needed to get his name out. He authored this initiative and a second (not on the June ballot) to tax cigarettes to pay for after-school programs. The United Teachers of LA union would profit because they work in some of the only schools spending only 5 percent on administration. Guilty schools would be fined and the funds given to schools that comply.

Possible Impacts: Increase in state oversight costs. Likely to hurt smaller school districts, whose administrative overhead tends to be disproportionately high.

Big Spenders: Michael Huffington has contributed some $150,000. Los Angeles Mayor Richard Riordan gave $100,000 as did Selim Zilkha, a Houston-based oil magnate.

"Parents, Teachers and Educators for Local Control," which opposes the measure, has raised more $325,000 from the Association of California School Administrators, California School Employees Association and State Council of Service Employees.

Endorsements: San Diego Teachers Assn., San Diego Mayor Susan Golding, LA Mayor Richard Riordan, U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein

Opponents: La Mesa-Spring Valley School Board, California School Boards Assn., California PTA, League of Women Voters, Democratic Party

State-Funded Design and Engineering Services. "Competitive Bidding"

224 Would generally require competitive bidding for state-funded engineering or design contracts of more than $50,000.

Pushers: Professional Engineers in California Government, the union for some 10,000 state highway engineers. They've hired Steve Hopcraft, who campaigned in 1996 to raise the minimum wage (Prop. 210) and legalize medical marijuana use (Prop. 215).

Likely Intent: State highway engineers have faced calls for "privatization" for years. Privatization is supposed to cut government costs. Then comes something like San Diego's Mission Valley Viaduct, in which a private firm signed off on hundreds of bad welds in a earthquake-retrofit project. Out came Prop. 224, pitting government engineers against private architects, engineers and business.

Possible Impacts: State contracts for engineering, architecture, surveying and environmental studies would be subject to a new process of cost comparison and competitive bidding.

Big Spenders: Professional Engineers in Calif. Gov't donated more than $1.5 million. The Correctional Peace Officers Assn. kicked in $10,000 and the Calif. State Employees Association around $21,000. Another $1.5 million was raised from smaller contributors.

Opponents have matched the millions, benefitting from every major engineering

Lemon Twist

by Cheryl Cohen

As you may have noticed, nothing in this election has sparked much interest. The most unusual thing I saw was the singular appearance by candidate James Hairgrove, Esq., at a city council meeting. No one I know has seen or heard from him since; and, although it could be the subject for a dime-store novel, it's doubtful that there's been any foul play involved. That's left to the campaign managers, or whomever it is that decides a good strategy is to tell voters not to vote for someone else, rather than rely upon their own candidates' attributes. My fellow Americans, therein lies the rub. This has been a paid anti-political message, and I use this whole sentence loosely.

In lieu of an interesting election campaign in Lemon Grove, I've been conducting my own "fantasy campaigns" so that I could keep in practice in case something (even remotely) intriguing happened in the real ones. Although it may all be for naught, I thought I'd share my own version of the standard campaign Q&A with you anyway:

1) What qualifications, attributes or perspectives would you bring to this elected position that your opponents would not?

Sessom: "Longer hair, if you don't count Ranger Dick's beard."
Whitmore: "Better hat."

2) In what ways do you think the city needs to serve children and families better?

Lake: "Better and more pancakes."
Greer: "On great big skewers over an open fire"

3) Are you satisfied with the city's budget process? If not, what changes would you propose?

Whitmore: "Divide it into four equal parts."
Hairgrove: "----"

4) What actions would you take, if elected, to improve the quality of the environment in the city?

Sessom: "Install Hepa air cleaners on Broadway."
Moore: "Install anything — just pay for it with Yount's salary."

5) Would you support city efforts to build connecting bicycle lanes on the city's major thoroughfares? Why or why not?

Clabby: "If it's good enough for the GPAC, it's good enough for me. And you, and you, and you, too."

Lake: "When I was young and Father said to go out and play in traffic, I'm sure he didn't mean on a bike — or did he?"

Is this campaign exciting, or what?

Not to change the subject or anything, but if you're a psychic, or know someone in East County who is, ask them to contact me (in a traditional fashion — like the phone, just in case I'm not tuned in). If you have to ask why, you needn't call.

Is it now payback time?

Here's a picture of Councilman Craig Lake (right) and myself (homeowner Leo Bodin) at a huge pothole on Dennis Lane. I feel that the city of Lemon Grove is punishing me for the occasional critical "Letters to the Editor" I write.

The pothole was first reported to the public works department in March. Councilman Lake saw the deep pit in April and mentioned to public works. Here it is May and nothing has been done.

I am about to turn 84 years old and would like to see the damage to the street in front of my house repaired during my lifetime.

The deception of Proposition 226

Those familiar with this column already know that I view the California election initiative process as, at best, idiocy, and, at worst, a dangerous and deceptive con game. Well folks, they're at it again, and my feelings are only reinforced.

The issue at hand in 1998 is Prop. 226. Obviously using the pernicious Golden State process as an opportunity to start a nationwide ball rolling, outside Republican interests have foisted this little stinker on us in hopes that an uninformed passage here will help in cutting the heart out of the political power of labor unions.

Oh, of course, the proposition doesn't come out and say that. Instead, they cleverly team up the union-busting elements with a piece of useless baloney about no foreign contributions, which is actually taken care of in existing law. Then they cleverly state that no American should be forced to contribute dollars to political causes that he/she doesn't personally support. I mean, you could wave the flag at those two notions, right?

What they are really doing here is putting roadblocks in front of political contributions from labor unions, which traditionally go to democrats. On the other hand, they make absolutely no mention of a similar choice for corporate stockholders whose funds overwhelmingly go to the GOP. Actually, a union member can already, under existing rules, ask that his dues not be used for specific political purposes. What Prop. 226 does, however, is mandate an involved and expensive record keeping process that, taken to the extreme, would render a union literally impotent as a political force, while allowing corporations free and open permission to do whatever they want with their money.

Looking at the TV ads in favor of Prop. 226, however, none of this is evident. Instead, they talk piously about no foreign influences and the American right to freedom of choice. This, of course, is the way the wretched initiative process works. Outside or hidden interests (60% of the money supporting 226 comes from out-of-state) carefully write an initiative to have maximum "quick look" appeal; paid signature collectors fan out through the state telling prospective signers as little as possible about what they are signing, and the multi-million dollar TV campaigns carefully steer an unwary public to vote for something they would never support if they really read it carefully.

Originally started as an honest effort to increase citizen participation in the governmental process, the California initiative monster has now become the refuge of scoundrels and secret special interests with lots of money to sell their questionable products. In the past, their batting average has been, thankfully, just so-so. Sometimes we are lucky to have a dedicated counter group get into the fight early enough to let voters know what a polecat they are being urged to put into law. But all too often, money and deception win the day.

Prop. 226 is one of those set-ups designed to hoodwink the gullible. Fortunately, enough articulate opposition has risen to make its future doubtful. We can be certain, however, that win or lose, election year 2000 will have a fresh batch of these half-baked goodies for us to struggle our way through. That is, unless we rise up and bring about some changes in this political disaster. Ah, who am I kidding? The powers-that-be will never let go of this golden goose.

On Badminton

I know the fabric of our society may be fraying a little around the edges—how else can Dan Burton be explained—but this is ridiculous. Do we value nothing anymore? When a high school badminton team is assaulted in broad daylight, we have the beginnings of a decline that cannot be tolerated in a civilized society. Before you dismiss this incident too lightly, let me point out that badminton is almost as old as our republic itself and something very much like badminton may have even been the sport of choice back then. History is silent on this point, but we could assume that George and Ben and Thomas and Alexander partook in some kind of leisure activities in those turbulent times. And who is to say that the Indian pastime known as poona wasn't it? After all, the British were mucking around in both the colonies and India at the time and stranger things have been known to happen. Thus, badminton could very well be a cornerstone of our country.

The badminton incident, as it was related to me at a local bar, unfolds like this. A San Diego high school badminton team—I didn't know there was such an entity either—was apparently assaulted after a league match by youths not valuing badminton. Leaving the courts, rackets cased and shuttlecocks tucked away, the players were assaulted by this group of badminton hating ruffians. The reported skirmish, though brief, included the hurling of bottles as well as epithets.

When soccer players around the world get together for competition, fans have been known to display very poor sportsmanship. Sometimes events have turned nasty. The same has been seen in our own brand of football. Fans at some venues become perpetrators of violence more intense than what is happening in the game. Remember those "snowballs" thrown at Charger players several years ago? Hockey players and some of their rowdy fans have been known to have troubled relations too. Even basketball, with its rules of refined etiquette and behavior, has had the occasional incident of player/fan violence. Major league baseball tends to stay above the fray with games that bore many fans into lethargy and a set of rules giving harsh punishment to any offending player—a player can be suspended for a whole game or two for just spitting in the wrong direction.

With this rumored badminton incident, however, are we now seeing the final decline of sports as wholesome recreation? From this point forward, will badminton players, like their counterparts in other sports, need security guards to escort them to and from the courts? Will badminton matches become dangerous venues for ordinary folks? How long before a badminton Dennis Rodman comes along practicing in-your-face badminton?

There are those who may pshaw this and say I'm taking a reported isolated incident and blowing it all out of proportion. All I can say is that they probably don't know someone who has struggled for years developing consummate badminton skills: the discipline to spin a racket one-handed; the confidence to cut a shuttlecock within an inch of the net; the decency at the end of a match to offer a firm handshake regardless of the outcome. It's for those I take the pshaws.

So, here's my challenge: Let's set aside differences and work for the preservation and safety of badminton as we know it. We must move into the 21st Century with rackets high and shuttlecocks a flying. That's the spirit that will keep us great.

Letter to the Editor

My vote is with Anderson

Each of the Republican candidates for 75th District State Assembly, Charlene Zettel, Mark Price and Joel Anderson, agree that government should not be in the business of funding abortions. However, only one of them is truly pro-life.

In the February 1998 issue of San Diego News Notes, Charlene Zettel is quoted as saying that while as a taxpayer she does not support government funding of abortions, "I would support family planning efforts - birth control, medication, devices." In other words, she favors government intrusion into people's private reproductive lives, even though abortion is frequently used as a back-up for failed contraception and government-backed contraception programs are proven dismal failures. In the same article, Zettel also said, "I believe there should be restrictions after three months." In other words, abortion is okay during the first trimester.

Mark Price's reasons for opposing government funding of abortion is somewhat different: "I want to see that whole issue [abortion] out of politics," he remarked at the February 26 Lake Hodges forum. In other words, abortion is okay, as long as my tax dollars aren't paying for it.

Joel Anderson, in contrast, differentiates himself as the only truly pro-life candidate in several ways. Anderson upholds the concept of personal responsibility by opposing the use of tax dollars for so-called "family planning" programs which promote abortion and contraception. He professes his belief in the sacredness of human life by opposing abortion for any reason except the life of the mother. And, importantly, he is the only candidate endorsed by the California Pro-Life Council.

For 75th District voters who vote their consciences, only one candidate fits the bill: Joel Anderson. I strongly encourage all who believe in the sanctity of human life to vote for Anderson on June 2.

Reel Thoughts

'Godzilla' not quite your average singing and dancing dinosaur

by Betty Jo Tucker

There's a whole lot of shakin' going on.

No, it's not the return of Elvis or another California earthquake. It's that gigantic Japanese lizard, Godzilla, on the loose again in movie theaters nationwide.

Previous "Godzilla" films, although lacking in sophisticated special effects, managed to thrill audiences, just the same. In addition to destroying cities and trampling almost everything in sight, this indestructible creature has fought giant twin caterpillars, three-headed flying monsters, a huge ugly crab, massive slime mold, and a metal Godzilla built by aliens to take over the world.

His incredible adventures have been documented in the following films:

- 1956-Godzilla, King of the Monsters.
 - 1964-Godzilla versus Mothra
 - 1965-Gidrah, the Three-Headed Monster
 - 1966-Godzilla versus the Sea Monster
 - 1969-Godzilla's Revenge
 - 1972-Godzilla versus Gigan
 - 1962-Godzilla versus Mechagodzilla
 - 1985-Godzilla 1985
 - 1989-Godzilla versus Biollante
- In his latest movie, Godzilla gets the full high-tech treatment from TriStar Pictures. From the Mother nature finally puts her foot down as Godzilla traces an ominous path through the streets of Manhattan in the TriStar Pictures' presentation of "Godzilla."

moment Big G stomps his three-subway-car long foot (claw?) on screen, most moviegoers will be spellbound by the technical wizardry showcased in this eleventh Godzilla film.

Director Roland Emmerich, the first non-Japanese "Godzilla" director, wisely selected believable actors to help make a fantastic story seem real.

Take a look at this cast-Matthew Broderick ("Ferris Bueller's Day Off"), Hank Azaria ("The Birdcage"), Vicki Lewis (t.v.'s "NewsRadio"), and Jean Reno ("The Visitors"). Everyone on the list is noted for fine performances rather than for movie star glitz.

So if you're a Godzilla fan, get ready to track his destructive path from the Polynesian Islands to New York City. Be prepared for churning oceans, capsizing ships, terrorized citizenry, and chaotic sounds. Pay particular attention to the nuclear scientist and insurance investigator (!) on the case. Their teamwork just might stop Godzilla before it's too late. But don't expect much depth of plot. After all, this is not "Barney's Great Adventure."

Were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter.

Limiting Congressional Terms.

225 Would advise California's elected officials to help enact a constitutional amendment to impose term limits on members of Congress.

Pushers: No one. The term limits organizations that drafted the initiative abandoned it after similar measures in other states were thrown out by the courts.

Likely Intent: To limit politicians to three two-year terms in the U.S. House of Representatives and two six-year terms in the U.S. Senate. Since the Supreme Court has ruled this can only be done by amending the U.S. Constitution, Prop. 225 was an end-run, requiring the California secretary of state to monitor and brandish any state legislators who did not support term limits for Congress. This, too, was ruled unconstitutional after the proposition qualified for the ballot.

Possible Impacts: None. It will be struck down if passed.

Big Spenders: Some $400,000

was raised by national pro-term limits organizations.

Endorsements: None

Opponents: Democratic Party, League of Women Voters

Political Contributions by Employees, Union Members, Foreign Entities.

"Paycheck Protection"

Would require labor unions to get written permission from their members before using union dues or fees for political contributions.

Pushers: Orange County businessmen who support vouchers, including one who lost a school board election to a teachers union-backed candidate.

Likely Intent: Why would school voucher advocates push a law to restrict union leadership? To curb the political clout of unions in general, teachers unions specifically, and to get the California AFL-CIO spending a ton of money now so they'll have less to spend in the November elections.

Possible Impacts: Unions will have to spend more on processing funds for political purposes. They will also lose revenue from union members who object to politicking.

Big Spenders: More than a million dollars has been raised to pass the measure, generally from out-of-state businessmen who promote school voucher programs. Grover Norquist's Washington, D.C.-based Americans for Tax Reform was top donor at $441,000, followed by Ohio-based Chiquita magnate Carl Lindner ($100,000), the Ohio-based Brenlin Group ($49,000), Indiana voucher provider J. Patrick Rooney ($49,000) and Texas voucher advocate James Leininger ($45,000). California benefactors include Howard F. Ahmanson ($49,000 in name of wife, Roberta, and $49,000 through Fieldstead & Co.), William Oberndorf and wife ($89,000), and A.J. Perenchio ($45,000).

Unions, especially the Calif. Teachers Assn., are opposing the measure. The teachers kicked in more than $3 million. Laborers putting up $100,000 each include the State Building Trade, Calif. Labor Federation, Amer. Fed. of State, County & Municipal Employees and the United Food & Commercial Workers.

Endorsements: San Diego County Board of Supervisors, County Board of Education Trustee Tom Davies, Grossmont Union High School District Governing Board, Assemblymen Jan Goldsmith & Steve Baldwin, Congressman Duncan Hunter, State Senator Dave Kelley, Gov. Pete Wilson, Republican Party

Opponents: Calif. Nurses Assn., Calif. Organization of Police & Sheriffs, CalPIRG, Calif. Professional Firefighters, Calif. State Employees Assn., Calif. Teachers Assn., Congress of Calif. Seniors, Democratic Party, League of California Cities, League of Women Voters, Planning & Conservation League, San Diego County Board of Education, Sierra Club

English Language in Public Schools. "Unz Initiative"

227 Would largely scrap bilingual education in public schools and replace it with a short-term English immersion program.

Pushers: Investment entrepreneur and former gubernatorial candidate Ron Unz.

Likely Intent: Many characterize the "English for Children" as just another racist move against Hispanics, following on the heels of Prop. 187 (cutting off benefits to illegal aliens) and Prop. 209 (ending affirmative action.) However, Unz opposed Prop. 187 in 1994. Is it possible he or a friend of his has an English-immersion program he wants to sell to every school in California?

Possible Impacts: Every school district would have to adopt the same type of program.

Big Spenders: Unz financed the signature campaign with some $650,000 of his own money. Second biggest donor is Ahmanson with $100,000, followed by Florida businessman William Dunn ($75,000) and New Yorker

Richard Gilder ($40,000). Opposition money has come from California Teachers Assn. ($350,000), Calif. Federation of Teachers ($50,000) and Calif. Assn. for Bilingual Education ($50,000).

Endorsements: Gov. Pete Wilson, Libertarian Party

Opponents: Democratic Party, League of Women Voters, all current candidates for governor of California

Campaign financing information represents activity reported through March 17 of this year. Campaign contributions and expenditures since March 17 will not be available until next week. Web browsers can update their information at the California Secretary of State's excellent new web site, www.ss.ca.gov/prd/prd.htm.

How to find your polling place

Registrar of Voters Mikel Haas reminds voters to check the back of their sample ballot pamphlets for the location of their polling place for the June 2 Gubernatorial Primary Election. As many as 20 percent of San Diego County's polling locations change for each election.

Poll locations change for a number of reasons:

- To replace a previous polling site which has become unavailable;
- To re-assign voters when uneven voter population growth has occurred;
- To provide better access and convenience for voters;
- To make use of public buildings and handicapped accessible sites when possible; and
- To develop increased long-range stability in precinct boundaries.

If, after checking the poll assignment on the back of their sample ballot, voters are uncertain where their polling place is located, they should call the registrar's office before Election Day at 565-5800 for assistance. Avoid the very busy telephone lines that are expected on June 2.
